

When it comes to security..... ... who do you trust?

It is a serious question for anyone considering utilising professional security services in their home or business. And here's a serious answer.

As a member of the New Zealand Security Association (NZSA) we take our responsibility to our clients seriously.

We're proud to belong to an Association which:

- Sets the standards for the security industry in this country;
- Ensures its members operate to strict professional Codes of Practice and Codes of Ethics;
- Has established a high-level formal relationship with the Police and other government agencies; and
- Is recognised as the voice of the industry in this country and is responsible for constantly improving security industry performance standards.

When you invite a security company into your home or business, you need to know you're dealing with a professional committed to meeting the highest standards. That's why it's crucial that you deal with a member of the New Zealand Security Association.

CODES OF PRACTICE

Under the Association's Rules and Bylaws, member companies must subscribe to strict Codes of Practice and business ethics. As members, they are committed to operating to best practice and are accountable to the Association for their performance.

POLICE PARTNERSHIP

The NZSA has signed a letter of agreement with the New Zealand Police to formalise the sharing of knowledge and information, and working together to reduce crime and increase community safety.

SETTING STANDARDS

The NZSA works closely with the Insurance Council of New Zealand and other professional organisations in setting the standards for security products and services.

PROMOTING EDUCATION

The NZSA plays a key role in education and training within the security industry.
